ABOUT THE STATE

HAPPENINGS OF INTEREST FROM DIFFERENT SECTIONS

John Fenton, station agent in White River Junction, has a penholder made from a piece of oak wood that once was a piece of the famed U. S. Frigate Constitution that played so conspicuous a part in the war of 1912.

Fire on the premises of John Kidney of East Ryegate burned 40 cords of wood and damaged small trees. Mr. Kidney is aged and has but one arm, so the loss falls heavily on him. It is not known how the fire started.

A Poland, employed by the Springfield Electric Railway company, who was working on one of the Balch teams, discovered a dynamite cap lying in the coal shed and ignorant of the contents commenced picking the same with a match. An explosion resulted, and the man suffered the loss of all his fingers on one of his hands and a badly burned face.

Herbert Knapp, an employee in the railroad shops at Lyndon, attempted to catch hold of a ladder on a car of a moving train Sunday, June 15, and, losing his hold, dropped between the train and station platform, lying there until the long train had passed, for to move would have meant death. He was found to have crushed one foot so that amputation was necessary above the ankle.

John McGuire, who had spent the greater part of his life in Bennington, was run over and fatally injured by a trolley car near Wallonsac Sunday. According to the motorman, the man was lying across the track and the fender struck him and threw the body under the car, cutting off one leg near the hip, crushing the other below the knee and cutting a large gash in his head, besides other injuries. He did not regain consciousness.

While P. R. Keating was cutting brush beside the road in Barton recently, he unearthed an old coin of gold preservation, except that on one side the lettering is defaced. It is apparently an English coin, as the crown is prominent on both sides. The date is plain "1812" and above the date are the letters "H. M." and the double eagle. The road where the coin was found is the old stage route through that section and it is probable some traveler lost this coin long years ago.

The celebration of the Fourth of July in Waterbury is expected to surpass all previous efforts. About $75 in prizes will be awarded. There will be an automobile parade, with prizes for the finest appearing car; field sports, baseball games, procession of floats with a fine bunch of horribles, drilling contests, band concerts, fire-works and other attractions. A ball under the direction of the Waterbury Athletic club will be given in Knights of Pythias hall in the evening. The Waterbury and East Barre baseball teams will have games both forenoon and afternoon.

During a thunder shower last week, the barn of Wilbur Blodgett in East Pecham was burned, with ten cows and two horses. All the goods were taken from the house and were badly damaged by the hard rain, but the wetting down of the roof of the other buildings prevented their catching fire. During the same storm, the lightning burned a barn of E. C. Wheeler of Boston, located in Irasburg, together with six cows, two horses, several hogs and 60 hens. Three cows belonging to Lewis Labounty were struck and killed the same night and the schoolhouse in West Glover was struck twice, but prompt action by citizens saved it from burning.

BROWNSON MEMORIAL.

Will Be Unveiled at Stockbridge July 4—Sketch of Famous Pictivist.

One of the most noted events of the year will take place at Stockbridge, Vt., on July 4, when a monument to Orestes Augustus Brownson, a famous philosopher, who was born in that town, will be dedicated with fitting ceremonies. Brownson is one of the famous sons of Vermont who is better known away than he is in the state which gave him birth, and since the agitation to erect a monument to his memory in Vermont arose, the question has frequently been asked "Who is Brownson?" Even in Stockbridge, where the early days of his life were spent on a farm, the older residents know that a famous citizen of that name was born there but their children to-day never heard his name mentioned until recently.

That the name of this great writer and critic, and one of the greatest friends the working man ever had, should not be unknown in his own state, the state council of the Knights of Columbus appropriated a sum to erect a suitable monument, and this boulder will be unveiled on Independence day.

As Brownson was born on one of the hill farms hard to reach, it is proposed to erect the memorial in the more settled portion of the town and an appropriate spot along the main highway, close to the village was selected. The exercises which will occur at 1 o'clock will be public.

The program of dedicatory exercises is not yet completed beyond the fact that it is expected that James Cogswode of St. Johnsbury will preside and that Rev. D. J. O'Sullivan, former representative from St. Albans City, will deliver the oration. Thomas W. Moloney of Rutland, and W. N. Thierault of Montpelier, and others will speak.

Orestes Augustus Brownson, philosopher, essayist, reviewer, was born in Stockbridge, Sept. 16, 1803, and died in Detroit, Mich., April 17, 1876. His childhood was passed on a small farm with plain country people, honest and upright Congregationalists. At 19 he joined the Presbyterian church and two years later was ordained and for three years wrote and preached as a Universalist minister. He abandoned the ministry and became associated with Robert Dale Owen and Fanny Wright in their war on marriage, property and religion, and he was expelled from the ministry.

Brownson, then at Auburn, N. Y., became corresponding editor. At the same time he established a journal in western New York in the interest of the workmen's party. His sympathies were always with the laboring class and he entered on the work of elevating labor and making it respected and his aim was moral and social amelioration rather than political. He next became a Unitarian and remained one for 12 years. In 1832 he settled at Walpole, N. H., opposite Bellows Falls and remained two years. Two years later he was pastor of the First Congregational church at Canton, Mass., and in 1839 organized in Boston the Society for Christian Union and Progress.

Although a steadfast Democrat he disliked the name Democrat and denounced party democracy. He denounced slavery, rights, not that men should be all equal but that all should be on the same footing and no man should make himself taller by standing on another's shoulder. He condemned the modern industrial system of labor at wages. Democrats were horrified at his articles. The Whigs reprinted them and Van Buren blamed them for his defeat. He never commanded respect or respect or had a promising career when he turned his back on honors and popularity in 1844 and became a Catholic at the hands of Conductor Bishop J. R. Fitzpatrick.

He published the Boston Quarterly Review, later the Brownson Quarterly Review and other magazines in which he did most of the writing, which attracted nation-wide attention. He was attacked on all sides and his answers and books published in that period make an interesting chapter in religious and social era of the first half century of the Republic. A handsome monument to his memory has been erected on Riverside drive, New York.

The monument to be erected at Stockbridge was cut of Barre granite in the shops of the Columbian Granite Co. in Montpelier. It stands six feet high, four feet wide and two feet thick, being of boulder design with bronze tablet, suitably inscribed. The monument will be shipped to Stockbridge this week.

IN BOSTON MARKETS

Butter Prices Remain Firm, Egg Supplies Growing More Limited.

Boston, June 25.—The weakness of outside butter market does not seem to have much effect on the local market, at least not as far as fine goods are concerned. Dealers report a prompt clearance of fancy butter at firm prices, small packages, for which the demand is large as usual at this time of year, commanding even higher prices than they have recently. The lower grades are plenty and some shading of prices is necessary to prevent accumulations. The cheese market holds firm; there is a good speculative demand, and the strength of the primary markets also has an important bearing on the local situation. The egg market is still looking up, especially on hen eggs, supplies of which are constantly growing more limited.

Jobbing quotations:
Butter—Fancy Northern creamery, tubs 31@32c, boxes 32@32½c, prints 33@33½c, fancy Western creamery in tubs 30½@31c, good to choice creamery 28½@29½c.

Automobile Club of Vermont 1913 Year Book.
Automobilists and others have been eagerly awaiting and will gladly welcome the annual year book of the Automobile club of Vermont, which is now being distributed by S. S. Ballard of Montpelier, the secretary and treasurer of the club.

The book contains the usual well-known features, but the form has been changed in some respects for the better convenience of users.
The highest registered number June 15 was 5,000, an increase of 1,300 over the registrations of a year ago. There is also an increase in the number of motorcycle owners and automobile dealers. This is evidence of the growing popularity of the automobile and assures a steadily increasing fund to be applied to the improvement of Vermont highways.

The secondary list of automobiles in the year book has the cars listed under the towns where the owners reside, with the towns arranged in alphabetical order instead of being divided by counties as heretofore. This makes examination and identification easier for all users of the book, and especially for strangers.

The book also contains a carefully prepared and accurate highway map of the state which will be of advantage to every person using an automobile.
Only members of the Automobile club of Vermont are entitled to a copy of the book, and the number of such members is steadily increasing. Membership in the club carries with it not only handsome brass and enamel club emblems, membership in the American Automobile association and subscription to the official magazine, The American Motorist. The receipts from membership fees and annual dues are applied to carrying on the work of the club, and that organization has already accomplished much in securing improved highway legislation, better laws for the regulation of automobiles and use of the highways, the placing of hundreds of direction and danger signs on important highways all over the state, publicity for the state in other ways than those directly connected with automobile affairs and furnishing information to tourist visitors.
